

Contents

Introduction Roy Porter	vii
Waters and spas in the classical world Ralph Jackson	1
“In this our lightye and learned tyme”: Italian baths in the era of the Renaissance Richard Palmer	14
The development of the spa in seventeenth-century France L. W. B. Brockliss	23
A sword in a madman’s hand: professional opposition to popular consumption in the waters literature of southern England and the Midlands, 1570–1870 David Harley	48
Physicians, chemists, and the analysis of mineral waters: “The most difficult part of chemistry” Noel G. Coley	56
Chemistry, medicine, and the legitimization of English spas, 1740–1840 Christopher Hamlin	67
A trial of the Bath Waters: the treatment of lead poisoning Audrey Heywood	82
Spas and sensibilities: Darwin at Malvern Janet Browne	102
Arthur Stanley Wohlmann, the first Government Balneologist in New Zealand Ralph H. Johnson	114
The contradictions of specialization: rheumatism and the decline of the spa in inter-war Britain David Cantor	127
Index	145